FIRE AND SECURITY SPECIALISTS AIM TO ENHANCE SERVICES WITH STRATEGIC RELOCATION...

Atlas Fire & Security has moved to further enhance its service by opening new offices in Belfast.

The company, which specialises in all fire and security products, has been based at Westbank Road for a number of years but opted to make the move to Glenbank, just off the Crumlin Road, in a bid to provide a better all-round service.

It is a move that displays confidence at a time when many other companies are consolidating. But, as John Nesbitt, Managing Director, explained, the decision was based on building on the company's reputation.

"It was a case of making the most of a good opportunity," he said. "We have been thinking about moving for a number of years but were determined to find the right location – and I think that's what we have achieved."

"The new offices at Glenbank provide us with a more central location as well as a more modern set-up that better reflects our forward-thinking approach. While it is not something that directly affects the vast majority of our customers what we hope is that they will notice the higher standard of service that we can now provide." That's a tall order for a company that already sets the standards within the fire and security industry.

Atlas Fire & Security is Northern Ireland's leading independent, open protocol supplier and maintainer of fire and security products.

FREEDOM

Open protocol systems make detectors, interfaces and control equipment interchangeable across a wide range of manufacturers and offer customers freedom of choice in terms of both product and installer.

"We are not confined to selecting products from just one manufacturer," explained Robert Creagmile, Sales Director. "What this means is that we can develop the best possible system for the best possible price which is always an important factor."

This value-for-money is matched by the company's relationship with the world's leading fire and security manufacturers, providing additional peace of mind.

If that wasn't enough, Atlas Fire & Security also provides a complete fire and security solution, ranging from initial design through to installation, final commissioning and service.

Not only that, but once a system is installed, you can rely on the company's excellent after-sales service provided 24/7 by a team of qualified engineers.

Robert added, "We provide a system that is tailored to meet the needs of each individual customer. Fire and security is not an area that you want to take any chances with and with over 25 years of experience in the industry, we have the expertise to provide reliable protection."

But you don't have to take Atlas' word for it. The company works hard to earn third-party accreditations to further improve the company's standing within the industry.

The company holds the NSI (National Security Inspectorate) Fire Gold standard for fire detection systems, CCTV, intruder alarms and door access solutions. In addition, Atlas also maintains a strong relationship with the Fire Industry Association (FIA) and is also associated with BAFE (British Approvals for Fire Equipment), an independent third-party registration body for the fire protection industry, and Constructionline, the UK Register of Pre-Qualified Construction Services.
